Arts and culture

@The Holbeck, Jenkinson Lawn, LS11 9QX

Slung Low is now based at The Holbeck: the oldest working men's club in Britain. They run the bar as a traditional members' bar and the rest of the building as an open development space for artists and a place where Slung Low invite other companies to present their work that otherwise might not get to be seen in Leeds. The equipment and vehicles of the company are lent to those who have need. It is a useful place that shares its resources with those artists who need them.

They also run a Community College, which is also now mobile via a yellow double decker bus! The college is a place where adults come to learn new cultural skills – from stargazing to South Indian cooking, from carpentry to singing in a choir – and all workshops, supported by Paul Hamlyn Foundation and Arts Council England, are provided on a Pay What You Decide basis.

We believe that access to culture is a fundamental part of a happy life. We believe that actions, however small, can have a big impact. We believe that culture can change our world for the better. Founded in 2000, Slung Low is an award-winning theatre company specialising in making epic productions in non-theatre spaces, often with large community performance companies at their heart.
